TREATY TRADER AND TREATY INVESTOR VISAS E-1/E-2

Section 101(a)(15)(E) of the Immigration and Nationality Act allows the issuance of nonimmigrant visas to nationals of any country with which the United States has a treaty for traders and investors who wish to enter the United States to engage in commercial interaction including the exchange of services, technology between the United States and the treaty country; or to develop and enhance the company's operations in which a substantial amount of capital has been invested or will be invested. The company's employees may be entitled to a Treaty Trader's visa if they are hired at a supervisor, managerial, or investors level. The applicant must be a national of the country that has the treaty with the United States.

REQUIREMENTS: TREATY TRADER (E-1)

- The applicant must be a national of the treaty country.
- The company, through which the applicant is entering the United States, must have the same nationality as the treaty country (Bolivia and the United States are treaty traders).
- The international trade should be "substantial" in the sense that there is a sizable and continuous volume of trade.
- The trade must be conducted mainly between the United States and the treaty country. More than 50% of the commercial interaction must take place between the United States and the treaty country.
- The term "trade" implies the international exchange of goods, services and technology, including international bank transactions, insurance, transportation, tourism, communications, data processing, advertising, accounting, engineering design, administrative consulting, technology transfer, and any other service that can be exchanged.
- The applicant must have a supervisory or executive position or have a highly specialized knowledge essential to the firm's operation. Non-skilled workers do not qualify for this type of visa, as they are available in the United States.

REQUIREMENTS: TREATY INVESTOR (E-2)

- The investor (either a real or corporate person) must possess the nationality of the treaty country. (Bolivia and the United States have a treaty).
- The investment must be substantial in a proportional sense to the total cost of the enterprise or the amount of the investment must be sufficient to ensure the treaty investor's financial commitment to the successful operation of the enterprise. The lower the cost of the business, the higher the percentage of investment is required, whereas, a highly expensive business would require a lower percentage of qualifying investment.
- The alien must not be investing in a marginal enterprise solely for the purpose of earning a living. The enterprise will be considered marginal if the investment will return only enough income to provide a living for the applicant and his family.
- The investment cannot be on real estate.
- The investor must have control over the investment of the enterprise and place funds or other capital assets at risk, in the commercial sense, in the hope of generating a financial return.
- Indebtedness, such as mortgage debt or commercial loans secured by the assets of the enterprise cannot count toward the investment, as there is no element of risk.
- The investor must reside in the United States to conduct the business.
- If the applicant is not the investor but an employee he should be assigned to an executive or supervisory position or possess skills essential to the firm's operations in the United States. Non-skilled workers do not qualify for this type of visa, as they are available in the United States.
